Program:

Rob Terry introduced Tim Toms, who owns Green Autos (see www.GreenAutos.com). Tim talked about alternative fuel vehicles. Wisconsin was the 48th State to allow electric vehicles and as a whole has been slow to accept such vehicles. Janesville city counsel rejected a request to permit neighborhood electric vehicles in 2007, but later approved their use in 2008. The neighborhood electric vehicles are currently limited to city streets only where the speed limit does not exceed 35 miles per hour. The vehicles are very safe and there has never been a person killed in an accident in the US. The vehicles have all the same amenities as a gas powered vehicle, but are limited in range to 35 miles. Charging the vehicles only requires an outlet and the cost of powering them is approximately $3.50 per month, compared to the price of gasoline! The cars have ZERO emissions and are the first generation of the electric cars to follow. GM is working on the Chevy Volt and other companies are working on longer power sources to permit the electric charge to last longer. Starting price is only $15,900! Stay tuned, more alternative fuel vehicles will be coming, assuming the auto industry and the governments have learned their lessons about being dependant on gas powered vehicles.

Thanks to David O' Leary for taking the notes. Members having information for future newsletters can email editor@janesvillekiwanis.org.
